THROWBACK CENTRAL

schar center heats up for its first homecoming concert

Somebody call 911 because Quinn XCII, Sean Kingston and Jesse McCartney burned up the Schar Center this homecoming concert. This homecoming concert was the first one to ever take place in Elon University's Schar Center, which opened in fall of 2018. Unlike past years, students had to reserve their tickets in advance and were given a seating assignment for the night.

The night began with up-and-coming artist, Quinn XCII, who performed his hits "Straight Jacket" and "Another Day in Paradise." Throwing it way back to 2009, Sean Kingston filled the crowd with energy and excitement during the performance of his hit song "Fire Burning". Sporting an Elon jersey, he even surprised the audience by joining them on the floor. Completing the night with more throwbacks, Jesse McCartney wooed the audience by singing oldies like "Beautiful Soul" and some new originals like "Better With You".

"It was a childhood dream come true," said first-year Ellen Fiedler, truly summing up a memorable homecoming concert 2019.
