Majors will learn how to use appropriate research and critical thinking skills to develop strategic communications recommendations that help organizations achieve their desired outcomes.

Common Career Paths

- Agency: Communications agencies offer a full range of advertising, branding, marketing and public relations services to companies. A communications agency works to figure out what the clients need and has to know the best media channel to reach them. They monitor and create communication trends for their clients.
- Education: Strategic communications in Education could be for a public or private school, college, or university. Schools use strategic communication to achieve goals as well as to construct organizational branding messages. This includes the purposeful and timely release of information among members of an organization and the public.
- Non-Profit: Strategic communications at nonprofits and political organizations work to craft communications, often to engage local, state, and national community members and legislators or to garner support for legislation or policy changes. Some of their responsibilities might include creating comprehensive media campaigns or promotional materials, building relationships on social media, or generating awareness through local print publications.
- Healthcare: Health communication includes verbal and written strategies to influence and empower individuals, populations, and communities to make healthier choices. Health communication often promotes positive changes in attitudes and behaviors of a target community. Health communication is related to social marketing, which involves the development of activities and interventions designed to positively change behaviors.
- Corporate Communications: Corporate communications assists public and private companies in improving their internal communication practices and typically help with areas such as employee training, leadership development, human resources, and team-building. Working with senior leadership, corporate communication brings clarity to a company's long-term mission, along with creating clearer, more effective channels of communication between employer and employee.
